

Abstract

An apparatus and method for measuring a deflecting force on a structural assembly where only one end of the assemblage is readily accessible to the application of the force. An inner torque bearing member is co-axially positioned within the outer torque bearing member and affixed at one end to the outer torque bearing member. A sense element is coupled to the structural assembly to measure the stress resulting from the force applied to the structural assembly.